CUE: A day after a deadly Al Shabaab attack killed 147 people at Garissa University, families and friends of the missing students awaited the arrival of dozens of bodies at Chiromo Mortuary in Nairobi. A leader of the Supreme Council of Kenyan Muslims spoke to the families and condemned the attacks. Images and soundbites.

HEADLINE: Families and friends of missing Garissa students await the arrival of bodies at a Nairobi mortuary

SYNTHE:

Francis Ochode (man), Sheikh Adan Wachu (man)

SHOT LIST:

NAIROBI, APRIL 3, 2015

SOURCE: AFPTV

SOUNDBITE 1, Francis Ochode (man), father of missing student (18 sec): "So I was trying to look for my son. I have not even got him on the phone, I have tried and failed. So I went to Kenyatta Hospital to see the ones brought there, he's not there. I have come here to the mortuary, I have not yet seen the body."

SOUNDBITE 2, Francis Ochode (man), father of missing student (30 sec): "Yesterday I tried since morning after hearing the news from the radio, so I started calling him, but all was in vain. He never responded up to now. So I'm doubting, if he's surviving. Even if it was snatched, that phone, how can't he borrow somebody's phone and say, oh Daddy, I'm just alive. That's why I'm worried maybe he's not alive."

SOUNDBITE 3, Sheikh Adan Wachu (man), Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Kenya Muslims (23 sec): "My utmost condolence for innocent children who were killed for crimes they have not committed. Those are my children and your children."

SOUNDBITE 4, Sheikh Adan Wachu (man), Secretary General of the Supreme Council of Kenya Muslims (23 sec): As an umbrella body of Muslims, our positions has always been very clear. We came out very clearly condemning them, and we will continue to condemn them here and even in the hereafter.
