

Executives on Campus Director, J McLoughlin receives the 2014 Baruch College Excellence Award for Leadership

Baruch College employees were recently recognized for their hard work and years of dedication to the College and presented with Baruch College Excellence Awards.

During the ceremony on April 29, Baruch President Mitchel B. Wallerstein and members of Baruch's administration recognized 129 staff members, who have served from 10 to 50 years at the College. At the same ceremony, six employees received the Baruch College Excellence Awards which were restructured to align more closely with the College's Strategic Plan and the College's ongoing commitment to Institutional Effectiveness.

We are thrilled to share that, J. McLoughlin, Director of the Executives on Campus Program received the Baruch College Excellence Award for Leadership. The recipient of the 2014 Baruch College Excellence Award for Leadership is one who: inspires change or productivity in others; gets others focused on solutions; works effectively across departments and organizations; and exhibits a willingness to take on any responsibility necessary to achieve success. J. has worked at Baruch College for over three years.

At the awards ceremony, President Wallerstein remarked:

"J. has fostered strong relationships with alumni recognizing their importance as future leaders of a program that relies heavily on graduates who want to give back to their alma mater. J. finds most rewarding, connecting a student to an executive mentor, noting that a "simple conversation [with a mentor] can change a student's life."

"As Director of Executives on Campus, J. has successfully developed partnerships across all three schools, collaborating with various departments to implement a strong, successful campus mentorship program that is now emulated by other schools. The program has grown exponentially under her leadership."
